Mission

The Predator-class's mission is to expand a particular Kazon sect's territory by dominating a battlefield with its superior firepower and aided by its cargo of Kazon shuttles.

Background

Like all Kazon starships, the Predator-class was originally a Trabe design, used primarily as a massive freighter. Upon inheriting these ships from the Trabe, the Kazon went about upgrading the ships to battleship specifications. Kazon scientists are somewhat of a misnomer, so the upgrade process was anything but efficient. Given the sheer size of the Predator-class, it is woefully undergunned. The class is simultaneously plagued with numerous systemic problems with many critical systems (such as propulsion and others) due to lack of Kazon know-how and upkeep. The few systems maintained well are combat-oriented systems, such as weapons and shields.

Predator-class ships serve as carrier vessels for the much more numerous Kazon shuttles, and are typically the command and control ships of the Maje of a Kazon sect.

Features

The Predator-class is armed with the equivalent of Type VIII phasers and plasma torpedoes, and is protected by an adequate shield system. Carried within its cavernous interior are two dozen Kazon shuttles, which are used as fighters by the various Kazon sects. The Predator's beam and missile firepower are superior to that of most neighboring species in the Kazon region of the Delta Quadrant, which is to say that for all its impressive size it barely brings to bare as much firepower as a Federation Galaxy-class starship one-third its size.
